SPECIAL SESSION 5

Multimodal Intelligence for Emotion Recognition and Health Perception

Multimodal intelligence has become a pivotal driving force in emotion recognition and health perception. This session, themed "Multimodal Intelligence for Emotion Recognition and Health Perception", is a dedicated platform for global experts to exchange cutting-edge research and innovative achievements. This session invites papers focusing on technical breakthroughs, practical application case studies, and ethical and privacy considerations across these themes. Discussions will center on integrating multimodal intelligence with core technologies of emotion recognition and health perception to explore new application scenarios, while we also welcome submissions on multimodal data fusion, lightweight model optimization and cross-domain adaptation strategies. It aims to facilitate in-depth knowledge exchange, accelerate the transformation of research outcomes, and chart the future development of multimodal intelligence in emotion and health perception fields.

Call for Papers

Topics of interest include, but are not limited to:

- Fusion architectures for emotion recognition and health perception
- Physiological signal processing for intelligent health monitoring
- Lightweight edge models for emotion and health computing
- Cross-domain & cross-population adaptation in affective perception
- Machine learning for mental health and stress detection
- Real-time intelligent systems for emotion and health perception
- Privacy and interpretability in affective & health intelligence
- Intelligent perception for healthcare and human-computer interaction
- Benchmarks and evaluation for affective health systems
- Large model enhancement for emotion understanding and health prediction
